Cannabis Use and Moral Judgement among College Students.....40 - 60
Henri Chabrol, Jonathan Bronchain, Patrick Raynal & John Gibbs

ABSTRACT

The aim of the present study was to evaluate the contribution of the maturity of moral judgment on cannabis use among college students. Participants were 1572 college students who completed self-report questionnaires measuring cannabis use, maturity of moral judgment, and emotional and personality variables. Thirty five percent of men and 30% of women reported having used cannabis at least once during the last 6 months. Logistic regression analysis found that the maturity of moral judgment was a significant predictor of cannabis use versus non-use. This study suggests the importance of evaluating moral judgment in studies of risk factors of cannabis use and to develop effective and non-moralizing interventions targeting permissive beliefs and other socio-cognitive variables determining cannabis use and misuse.

College Students' Alcohol and Substance Use: Religiosity as a Protective Factor.....61 - 87

ABSTRACT

In this paper, we examined the extent to which one's own religiosity, as well as that of her or his peers, has on alcohol and substance use among undergraduate students at a medium-sized public university in the southeastern United States. Findings indicate that though peer religiosity significantly affects substance use, one's own religiosity is not a significant predictor of substance use. Discussion of results, limitations of the study, and directions for future research are also discussed.
